

A Part-time, Online PhD by Distance Learning

Education and Social Justice

This part-time PhD enables experienced professionals worldwide to focus on, and research, social justice issues at the heart of their own professional practice and concerns...

This part-time, structured PhD (by thesis and coursework) is undertaken entirely online, over 4 years, by people around the world. We have designed the programme to enable issues, theories, methods and evaluations to be applied specifically to the particular concerns, contexts and priorities of the organisations and environments in which participants are working.

The programme is for professionals world-wide who are working to promote social justice in or through education (in its broadest sense). The programme will be of benefit to a wide range of people, including, but not limited to:

- teachers working in schools, further education, higher education, and lifelong learning; policy makers; managers; researchers working with social justice issues; youth workers; activists and advocacy workers;
- people with equity or social justice portfolios in a variety of institutions; education support personnel;
- consultants; researchers and workers in charities and NGOs; and civil servants.

The modules undertaken are:

- Understanding Social Justice Internationally: Issues, Theories and Approaches.
- Promoting Social Justice through Education.
- Social Justice in Institutions and Organisations.
- Researching Social Justice.
- Evaluating the implementation of Social Justice Programmes.
- Writing and defending the thesis.

If you join this programme you will be undertaking a PhD in a Department that has a world class reputation for excellence in both teaching and research and be supervised by an expert in the field.

Department of Educational Research

If you have any questions, or would like further information about this programme, please contact the Programme Co-ordinator, Jo Dickinson at jo.dickinson@lancaster.ac.uk www.lancaster.ac.uk/fass/edres/study/social_justice_education/index.htm